

CHANGE IS A'COMIN' INTERNATIONAL WEBCAST

LIVE : JUNE 26TH • 1PM EASTERN • 10AM PACIFIC

In the six weeks since Lyndon LaRouche's last international webcast on May 8, the world has entered into a new phase of international collapse, and of opportunity for dramatic positive change. Thus, when he takes the webcast stage again on June 26, at 1 pm Eastern time, LaRouche will address that changed situation, and how U.S. patriots, and international leaders, must act immediately to bring the world out of its current breakdown crisis. For it's clear: Change is coming, but the action or inaction of U.S. patriots will determine what kind of change it is.

If the leadership of the mass strike process which is accelerating in the United States takes up the program put forward by LaRouche PAC--ramming through the restoration of Glass-Steagall principle as the first step in global reconstruction, and forcing Obama out of office by constitutional means--the U.S. will be in a position to lead the world out of its current collapse into a New Dark Age. Western Europe, China, Russia, and India will all move to join the U.S. in a process of world reconstruction, based on a fixed-exchange rate financial arrangement, and long-term credits for infrastructure development.

On the other hand, if the world situation is left in the hands of the corrupt, British-controlled political class-

-starting with President Obama, and extending through much of the U.S. Congress, and the leadership of European governments--a new steep financial collapse, and acceleration of the economic breakdown crisis, will be virtually assured. That disaster will be all the worse, given the horrors carried out by the British imperial oil company, BP, in the Gulf of Mexico.

LaRouche's webcast will lay out the choice. Tune in at 1 pm eastern on www.larouchepac.com, or call 1-800-929-7566 to find out how to attend a showing in your area.

TO RESTORE GLASS-STEAGALL: DUMP BAIL-OUT BARNEY FRANK

On Sunday, June 13, 2010, Rep. Barney Frank (D-Mass.) lied through his teeth, in response to a direct challenge from Rachel Brown, the LaRouche Democrat who is challenging him for the party's Congressional nomination in the upcoming September Massachusetts primaries. Brown has focused her campaign on the reinstatement of the Glass-Steagall Act, the FDR-era law that created a wall of separation between the commercial and investment banks and insurance companies. Brown has also forcefully called for the impeachment of President Barack Obama, and for a vast expansion of the NASA manned space program, which President Obama has shut down.

Appearing together before the Brookline Democratic Club, Brown accused Frank of being one of the engineers of the destruction of Glass-Steagall, and one of Wall Street and London's key defenders on Capitol Hill.

In response to Brown, Barney lost his cool, and lied, repeatedly. I voted against the repeal of Glass-Steagall, Barney pleaded, and lied that the bill now working its way through House-Senate conference would be the strongest banking reform bill since the New Deal. Barney is going to eat those words!

About the only true thing that Barney said was that he did, indeed, vote against the Gramm, Leach, Bliley bill, the 1999 Financial Services Modernization act that repealed Glass-Steagall—but only after the House and Senate had capitulated, and caved in to Wall Street pressure. At that point, passage was absolutely assured.

In fact, the House version of the Glass-Steagall repeal passed on July 20, 1999 without objection, and without any record of where individual Members of the House stood. The controversy between the House and Senate versions centered on the Community Reinvestment Act, which required banks to provide loans and banking services in low-income communities—not on the underlying issue of the repeal of Glass-Steagall.

And ever since the Nov. 4, 1999 repeal of Glass-Steagall, Barney Frank has been a powerful and consistent advocate of Wall Street interests—against the interests of the vast majority of Americans.

* In 2007, Frank, as Chairman of the House Financial Services Committee, boasted that he had played a central role in blocking any consideration of the Homeowners and Bank Protection Act (HBPA), the emergency law proposed by Lyndon LaRouche, and endorsed by hundreds of city councils, state legislatures and leading politicians and labor leaders throughout the United States, that would have put an indefinite freeze on home foreclosures, and would have placed the banking system under bankruptcy protection, under revived Glass-Steagall standards.

* In the still-ongoing deliberations on a banking reform bill, Frank blocked any House consideration of Glass-Steagall, by preventing two House bills, by Reps. Maurice Hinchey

(D-NY) and John Dingell (D-Mich.) from coming up for debate and vote. Both bills were referred to Frank's Financial Services Committee, and Frank tossed them in the trash can. He also blocked the Hinchey bill from being added to the House version of financial reform as an amendment.

* Now, Frank has further lined up with Wall Street, in the effort to remove the amendment, forcing banks to divest their derivatives trading desks, that was incorporated into the Senate bill, under the sponsorship of Sen. Blanche Lincoln (D-Ark.), who chairs the Senate Agriculture Committee. The Lincoln amendment, now Title 7 of the Dodd bill, is under massive attack from Wall Street's super-banks, and Barney has made clear which side of the barricade he is on.

First, on May 21, following a meeting at the White House, Frank publicly trashed the Lincoln amendment, declaring that it went "too far," and immediately, stock prices for Goldman Sachs and other mega-banks that would be hard hit by the derivatives ban, shot up.

The darker secret that Barney Frank desperately wishes to avoid, particularly as the primary election campaign heats up, is that he has been, for the entire time he has served in the U.S. House of Representatives (since Jan. 1981), Alan Greenspan's boy toy.

A serious review of the 15-year Wall Street and City of London drive to kill Glass-Steagall tells the story that Barney is desperate to hide.
