

This Present Century: The Secret Economy's Outlook

by Lyndon H. LaRouche Jr.

What I had named "The Secret Economy" has four crucial elements: a.) An urgently needed, revolutionary re-definition of an implicitly, dynamically orderable series of universal economic principles of infrastructure . b.) A fresh definition of universal physical space-time, restating the intention of the Mendeleev periodic table in terms of a universal system of cosmic radiation; c.) A new, scientific definition of the noetic quality of physical-economic function of "basic economic infrastructure" consistent with the enhanced view of the ontological characteristic of physical space-time," and d.) A needed redefinition of the term "economy" by a relevant, universal physical principle, done through a reform which identifies the human personal identity in terms of the creative potential of the specifically human mind, rather than as being regarded elementarily by a notion identified in terms of mere sense-perception.

Now, once each of those four categories had been considered, the next step would be a series of publications which introduce the reader to what must become adopted as the underlying principles of a science of physical economy. What will be presented in this fashion, will represent the needed programmatic political outcome for rescuing the planet from the present immediate threat of a global "dark age" now descending rapidly on our planet as a whole.

The result of this series of reports will become, in effect, a new way of looking at the human species itself, a new practical way of seeing man's newly defined, proper role in the universe, and of defining it in a practical way, the actual, future meaning of human life, as our species moves outward to include the occupation of other parts of our Solar system and into the larger scope of this galaxy and beyond.

The Friedrich Nietzsche who had not only died a horrible death, but a disgusting one, had said: "God is dead!" Nietzscheans today add nothing in this matter which Aristotle had not said earlier in denying the continued existence of both God's and human creativity in the universe. President Barack Obama and his cohorts are walking in the shadow of not only Paolo Sarpi, but that of the deceased Nietzsche; the toleration of Obama's kind of misleadership is typical of what is really wrong with the world's economy, when taken as a whole, right now.

Thus far, the relevant, probably best guess available to us, on the subject of economy, is that the concept of "universe" must be considered as if our universe had been generated by the creative powers which have been placed at the disposal of mankind. This should be read as echoed in the context of the past practices of relatively frequent, stellar modes of transoceanic navigation, during some past time such as either the most recent of the planet's presently known great ice-ages, or a still earlier such age. Such findings from known evidence are coherent with what the ancient so-called "Greek," Egyptian, and Pythagorean maritime cultures knew in respect to the subjects of "Sphaerics," of dynamis, and of the general knowledge of Pythagoreans such as Archytas. Such, for example, is the knowledge possessed by Plato, as typified by his celebrated illustration of this point in his Parmenides dialogue.

The same emphasis bearing on a principle of universal coherence, is to be recognized within today's broader sphere of the broader, modern European cultures, as expressed by such developments set as the pattern in the modern discoveries launched by such as Filippo Brunelleschi and Nicholas of Cusa, or by work of such followers of Plato and Cusa as Leonardo da Vinci, and by the Johannes Kepler who contributed his uniquely original discovery of a principle of universal, physical gravitation.

Such is the method which has led to what my "basement" associates have come to identify as the implications of the modern principled notion of that "cosmic radiation" through which man's existence interacts, more and more knowledgeably, with the cosmic forces of the universe, not only on a broader galactic scale, but even beyond.

However, above and beyond all that, it is our deepened conception of the individual member of mankind itself which must, already, now, impel us into a process of a succession of radical changes in our understanding of the true nature and destiny of our human species and the economy on which it depends, both within the universe, and, therefore, ourselves.

To Fix the Economy: Impeach Obama!

There are two, related shock waves slamming the United States, as the month of July begins.

The first is the new body blow dealt to the U.S. physical economy and people, coming from the criminal policies that the Obama Administration rammed through Congress. The failure to pass the so-called “jobs bill” means that 1.2 million people are now without unemployment benefits, and that number will soar to 2 million within weeks—with all the attendant consequences. It also means that the plug has been pulled on vital “COBRA” Federal health insurance subsidies for 2 million Americans, which will deprive most of them of health coverage altogether. And it means that $25 billion in Federal aid to states, especially for life-line programs such as Medicaid, was trashed—and with it, millions of especially elderly poor Americans, who are the first in line to get the Hitler treatment from President Obama.

None of these effects will be linear, so don't try to extrapolate them arithmetically, or otherwise rely on the comfortable sense-certainty that most people consider plausible. Entire cities, states, and regions of the U.S. are being wiped off the map, just as if they were Greece or Haiti—which is in fact exactly how British imperial policymakers view the matter.

The second shock is a mass-strike wave of an enraged American population, increasingly organized and educated by Lyndon LaRouche and his LYM-led Political Action Committee. They are not exactly amused by the fact that Washington, and Obama in particular, is out to kill them. And they are increasingly convinced that the only answer is LaRouche's Glass-Steagall reorganization of the U.S. financial system.

LaRouche's message today underscored what he emphasized in his international webcast of June 26: “You've got to get rid of Obama! I couldn't solve this problem without getting rid of this President.”

“Only the Federal government has the ability to utter credit. It is the only agency which has the resources to compensate for any of this stuff. That's the nature of the problem. It is not a fault in the system; it is a fault in this Presidency.

“The Federal Medicare program has a credit advantage, whereas the states do not have the ability to utter credit. And therefore, it's not an inequity, between two programs as such. The point is that the ability to create credit is properly limited to the Federal government by our Constitution. It's not quite the same in other countries. Therefore, the problem is: The shit hits at the top. That's the problem.

“You have to get rid of this President! So long as this President is in there, you do not have any chance of equity. So don't say this or that is the crisis; remember, 'the main thing is the effect.' The effects are manifest only at the top. If you don't like U.S. policy, don't try to say the states must have equal right to solve the problems. They don't have the intrinsic ability to solve the problems. Therefore, you have to go at the Federal government side on these things.

“You've got to get rid of Obama. We have to tell people: 'This seems to many of you to be unjust, because it's state vs. Federal. But that's our system, and you can't really change it because you would have chaos if you tried it. So therefore, what you have to do, is you have to change the President. Get him out of there. If you are not willing to get this President out of there, don't complain. You have no right to complain, unless you are acting to get this President out of there.'

“Since you have typical politicians, who by no means have my competence, don't expect them to come up with a solution. They rely on people like me, especially in times like this. Because there are certain things that have to be done, and as long as this President is incumbent, you can't do those things. And he's determined not to do them. He's a British agent; he's not a patriot. He doesn't give a damn about you. He serves the Queen.”
